BACKGROUND

Infrastructure is considered as engine for economic growth. Procurement activities are critical to every organisation due to their contribution to the financial success of a business. Procurement strategies ensure infrastructure delivery to maximise value generation for society as a whole. A decade back, public procurement was neither recognised as a separate vertical nor considered as strategic function within the public sector. It is only with the development of international trade rules, public procurement has emerged as vital part of global initiatives to craft a new economic world order.

In spite of difference in approach, both private and public sector have common goal of procurement with focus on efficiency, transparency and sustainability. On account of its vulnerability, due to dynamic environment, corruption and cost fluctuations, the procurement activities must be subject to continuous reforms and in compliance with emerging world-wide best practices. Besides this, due to magnitude of spending involved and procurement encompassing both political and economic dimensions, it is very important to reimagine, strategise and strengthen the function of procurement for promising future. This can be done by taking some innovative steps by involvement of Private partnership, reducing delays and disputes in contracting, working on resilient Supply Chains and application of technology in procurement etc.

After remarkable achievement of Global Procurement Summit in past few years, with delegates participating in summit from various nationalities, AIMA in partnership with Government of India and Bank announces Global Procurement Summit 2023, GPS 2023 scheduled on January 17-18, 2023 at New Delhi.
